

The Toys' Revenge

Adapted reading from a story by Claudia Groza

Tudor was a handsome little boy, with wavy hair and blue eyes. He was spoiled because his parents bought him every toy he asked for.

Dorela, his sister, was gentle and well-behaved. She played nicely with her dolls. One day, Tudor shouted:

"I don't want you to take your doll on my toy train!"

Dorela got upset and went to her room. She took her dolls and promised them that one day she would take them on a real train ride.

In his room, Tudor was playing with his toy soldiers. He gave them orders to destroy the toys meant for girls. The chief soldier said to him:

"What you're doing is not right! We'll upset a lot of children."

But Tudor replied:

"I don't care!"

Tudor went into Dorela's room and broke the arm of her favourite doll. When Dorela saw what had happened, she got very upset and said:

"You're mean and spoiled!"

Tudor went outside into the yard. He was thinking: "What will happen now? Will anyone still want to play with me?"

That night, in the toy chest, Tudor's toy soldier found Dorela's doll. She was sad because her arm was broken. The soldier said:

"I'll help you!"

And he repaired the doll.

The soldier thought that Tudor needed to learn a lesson. He gathered all the toys and said:

"Let's not listen to Tudor anymore! That way, he'll learn to behave nicely."

The next day, Tudor wanted to play, but the toys didn't obey him. He was sad and began to cry. Dorela said:

"Ask the Toy Fairy for forgiveness!"

That evening, Tudor pleaded with the fairy:

"I'm sorry! I promise I'll take care of the toys and share them with other kids."

The fairy spoke to the toys and blew her magic over them. The next day, Tudor was changed. He played nicely with Dorela and shared his toys with his friends.
